THAT RAILROAD

Which was to Connect Wheeling with Monongahela River.

STOCKHOLDERS AND PROMOTERS

Are Engaged in Trying to Settle Their Differences—Stockholders Claim the Promoters want the "Earth" or Its Equivalent—The Matter may be Settled Soon—Work will then be started on the Construction of the Road.

Several months ago the projected Pittsburgh, Monongahela & Wheeling railroad, to run from Monongahela City, Pa., on the Monongahela river, to Wheeling, seemed to have the brightest of prospects, and it was said that the road would be completed within a year. For some time, however, nothing more has been heard of the new road that was to open up a new coal field for Wheeling. The Pittsburgh Post explains the slump, as follows:

James H. McCreery, who piloted the Junction railroad through the manifold difficulties that beset its birth, conceived the idea of the Pittsburgh, Monongahela & Wheeling railroad. Mr. McCreery interested some New York promoters in the scheme, and they in turn convinced local capitalists that a new railroad to Wheeling would pay. Two of the local capitalists are J. M. Friend and Harry Hoffat. A company was formed, a charter was obtained, officers were elected and the contract for construction was awarded last fall. Gen. G. C. Dacy, of New York, became the president, and Mr. McCreery was elected general counsel, while George W. Dodge, of New York, and Mr. Broadbent, of Philadelphia, occupied other positions.

So certain seemed the success of the project that the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railway Company, at its last annual meeting in Pittsburgh, entered into a traffic arrangement with the new railroad. Capitalists were taken out over the line of the road and looked at the valuable coal lands, and Contractor Giannini made preliminary preparations, when suddenly there was a stop. The promoters and the capitalists fell out over their respective shares of the stock and bonds, and that's the situation just now. Propositions and counter propositions have been made and it remains for the promoters to submit when the capitalists will not open their pockets.

This is the situation just now: Messrs. Dacy, Dodge, McCreery, Broadbent and others are the promoters; Hoffat, Friend and others are the moneyed men; Giannini is the contractor, and his interests naturally lie with the capitalists. Now, the moneyed men have come to the conclusion that, as things are just now, the promoters have much the better of the situation, and that they themselves, as the furnishers of the cash and credit, should get a little more than they have and much more than the promoters. In fact, they have not the high opinion of brains that the promoters have, and believe that money talks. Consequently they have made the other men a proposal. They have offered them a certain percentage of the stock, how much is not stated, and have agreed to allow them two places on the board of directors. Giannini, backed up by the Pittsburgh capitalists, offers to build the road, take all the stock and bonds in payment, and afterward to turn to the promoters a certain specified percentage.

Mutual propositions have been drawn up, but none has been signed by either side yet. The promoters have, of course, the upper hand to a certain extent, as they hold possession of the charter and control the stock of the organization; the local capitalists have the money. If the promoters could get the cash elsewhere they might snap their fingers at these moneyed fellows; but the latter seem not to be afraid that someone else will step in and take up the scheme, giving the promoters the longer end, and freeing the present capitalists out.

The road is projected to start on the side of the river, opposite Monongahela City, cross the stream and go on to Wheeling by way of Bentleyville, Ten Mile Village and the valley of Jacob creek. It would enter the West Virginia metropolis by the Wheeling bridge and terminal system.

Room for Improvement.
Those who know Mr. H. F. Behrens, are acquainted with the fact that in his opinion there are three places in the world that are fit to live in—Wheeling, New York and Hamburg. "I am as much at home in one place as in the other two," is the way the gentleman puts it. "But I will have to drop Wheeling from that list," says the gentleman, "unless there is a reform in two or three respects. Now there is the wharf; that is a beautiful place to take a visitor to. All that rubbish is an eyesore and a disgrace to the city. Then there is the creek valley; such a place would not be tolerated anywhere else." All of which is true and to the point.
